The program is open to all and is especially beneficial for individuals with prediabetes, type 1 or type 2 diabetes, as well as members of their support system. Dining With Diabetes helps participants build practical food skills through hands-on cooking while learning self-management strategies to better manage diabetes and prevent or delay related complications. Focused on disease management and prevention, the program covers topics such as healthy eating, physical activity, monitoring, medication management, and risk reduction. Classes include research-based education and healthy recipe tastings.
